Pediatric Intensive - Effects of Heroin in the Pediatric Community

Sponsored by Cincinnati Pediatric Society

Friday, October 16, 2015 | Cincinnati Children's S Building

Heroin addiction in the Tri-State area has become a grave health crisis which affects individuals from all ages and socioeconomic groups. Front line medical providers such as primary care physicians, pediatricians, nurse practitioners, and nurses are increasingly tasked with treating the many medical, developmental, psychological, and social implications of this problem with limited training and even more limited time. This intensive conference hosted by the Cincinnati Pediatric Society will take an in-depth look at the following components of heroin addiction with the goal of providing clinical knowledge to improve patient outcomes:

- Neonatal addiction
- The public health crisis in our community
- The addiction cycle including teen addiction

In addition to the valuable clinical education and resources provided during this intensive, physicians will have the opportunity to complete an American Board of Pediatrics MOC Part 2 self-assessment for 10 MOC Part 2 points.
